Lisa White works at the UCMP (UC Museum of Paleontology). She came to the UCMP after a 22-year history at Santa Cruz University. She taught Geosciences and she was the Associate Dean of the college. She also taught in paleontology, geology and oceanography. She gave guided research projects with graduate students.

Lisa stated that her home was only a block away from California academy of science in golden gate park. SF-ROCKS helped kids understand science. SF state had the goal of generating similar interest and excitement for geosciences. Lisa is continuing those goals. Her history with the UCMP is interwoven with with the understanding Evolution and science.

I could not find her birthday but I know she is still alive because her email is on a website. She is a micro paleontologist. She graduated from Santa Cruz University. She then became a professor at Santa Cruz university. The way she found her job was when she went on a paleontologist trip and found her sense of adventure.

She had a very strong passion for her job. Her passion was another reason for her job. From 1988-1995 she worked for MPES. MPES stands for minority participation in the earth science. She was appointed chair of the GSA committee. She is really cool
