Every day after school, Thomas worked at a grocery store run by Mr. Barton. It was 1931. Times were tough, and his family needed his help. “Has your dad had any luck finding a job?” asked Mr. Barton.

“No, sir,” Thomas answered quietly.

“Don’t you worry,” said Mr. Barton kindly. “He will.”

Thomas delivered groceries for Mr. Barton. As he pushed the cart through the city, he noticed that people all around him were struggling to make a living. He felt lucky to have his job.

That night, Thomas lay awake in the dark. He couldn’t help overhearing his mom and dad talking. “I don’t want Thomas to have to quit school,” said Dad, “but he could work longer hours if he did.”

“You know how he loves school,” said Mom.

“I know,” said Dad sadly. “It’s not fair for a boy so young to have to work so hard.”

The next day, Thomas sat by the window and studied. All of a sudden, he heard a loud noise outside. A man galloped on horseback through the street. “Workers wanted!” cried the man. “Workers wanted to build a skyscraper!” Thomas ran to tell Dad.

After Thomas delivered groceries for Mr. Barton, he rushed straight home. “Good news, Thomas!” said Dad. “I got the job! I want to thank you. We couldn’t have gotten through this tough time without you!”
