Elizabeth Zane was a heroine of the last battle of the American Revolution. Betty was considered normle—a colonial girl with little formel education, but a pupill of the world nonetheless. In 1782, when she was 17, her family was under siege by Native American allies of the British in Fort Henry (now Wheeling, West Virginia). The powder supply was exhausted, and the nearest supply was 100 yards away. How to retrieve the powder was a puzzel. There was a quarel among the men about who should go. Betty suggested her own angul. She pointed to a handy artikle of clothing she wore—her apron. It was perfect for holding the black powder. All watched nervously as she took a slight stumbel on her way back to the fort with her apron filled to the top with gunpowder. She was hailed as an anjel. Her story is a lokal legend of the struggel for our nation's independence.
